

Paediatric Day Surgery Unit

Children going home after a Preputial Stretch

How long will it take my child to recover?

It will probably take your child 2 - 3 days to recover from the operation and 4 - 5 days for the skin to heal. It will be necessary to keep your child away from school and nursery during this time. When your child returns to school or nursery, they should not go swimming, do P.E., contact sports or any rough play for another week.

What should I do to help my child recover?

- You or your child need to retract and then return the foreskin once a day, starting the following day, until the area is healed.
- Your child should rest today and gradually increase their activities as they seem able.
- Encourage your child to have lots of drinks as this will help your child to pass urine.
- Check if your child finds it difficult to pass urine. This may be because of worry or pain. A warm bath can help with pain relief.
- You can relieve the pain with Paracetamol and / or Ibuprofen. Make sure that you follow the instructions on the bottle or pack. A nurse will advise you on when and how often to give the medication.
- Keep the wound dry the day of the surgery.
- Until the stitches dissolve, give your child two baths every day to keep the wound area clean. Baths to start the day after surgery.
- Try to stop your child from touching the wound area. Don't worry about swelling and crusting of the wound. This is normal.
- It is better for your child to wear loose or no clothes.

Is there anything to watch out for?

Some oozing around the operation area is common. However, if there is persistent bleeding or if the oozing becomes thick, green or yellow, you should get medical advice.

Will my child need a follow-up appointment?

Your child may or may not need a follow up appointment depending on your consultant. This will be made before your child goes home or will be sent in the post.
