The Epilepsy Specialist Nurse

Introduction

Epilepsy is the most common serious neurological condition affecting approximately 600,000 people in the U.K.

Epilepsy can start at any age but most commonly starts in childhood and in the elderly.

Philosophy of care

Our nursing care is based on the belief that all patients, relatives and friends are individuals with their own cultural, social, personal and spiritual needs, which we will seek to respect, support and value.

As epilepsy specialist nurses, we will take opportunities to keep abreast of the changes and developments in current practice, maintain a broad range of skills ensuring appropriate use of resources and recognise that good communication, support and care are necessary to promote a sense of well being for patients and their families.

Our goal, as far as possible, is to enable each individual attain and maintain their optimum level of health and well being.

The Role of the Epilepsy Specialist Nurse

If you or a family member have been told that you have epilepsy, there will be lots of questions you may want to ask.

For example:

- What is epilepsy?
- How will it affect my life?
- Why have I developed epilepsy?
- Will I be taking drugs forever?

And possibly many more questions.

The role of the Nurse is to help, advise and support you through the maze of questions. She/he can also advise and educate friends, colleagues and employers about epilepsy and its management.

Information and Education about Epilepsy

The Epilepsy Specialist Nurse can spend time with you and your family either in the clinic or at your home, to discuss any issues you may have concerning epilepsy.
